MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MR, HEINRICH'S CONCERT.

The concerts of a miscellaneous character are slow in beginning this season. More than a month has passed since the overtures were played at the opera-houses, yet the concert halls have been all but unoccu-pled, the only affairs of diguity and worth being those of the Philharmonics, Society and Club, and the testimonial concert to Mr. Max Heinrich, which took place last night in Steinway Hall.

Mr. Heinrich, himself an artist of excellent calibre, had subject. the help of worthy people, of whom the chief was Miss Emily Winant, the whole-souled and splendidly equipped singer upon whose shoulders has fallen the mantle of Annie Louise Cary. That she can wear it worthly she showed last season and not one of the newcomers in the field since the regretted retirement of Miss Cary has proved herself able to contest the possession of it with her. She sang again last night in her generous way, with a voice that seemed even r with a voice that seemed even more in powerful and expressive than ever. The Philham Club played some pleasing selections in a finished m and Mr. Heinrich disclosed his versatility in a ron aria from spohr's "Faust," a set of Spanish songs by sen and a buffo af from Lortzing's "Czar und Zin mann." His vocal outfit is adequate to music of a order and he handles it with intelligence and taste.

MR. MILES AND THE BIJOU THEATRE.

Robert Miles, the well-known theatrical manager of Cincinnati, stood yesterday in the middle of a tangle of scaffolding which is all that can be seen of the interior of the new Bijou Theatre. "I am going to have the handsomest theatre in New-York," said he. "I found it a barn; I leave it an architectural and decorative genu. I expect to have everything pushed on so that we can open on November 27. The theatre itself is finished and only the front remains to be done. This is my only object only the front remains to be done. It is a so all sole of the visiting New-York. I arrived this morning and I go back to-morrow night.

"What about my arrangements with Abbey! Well, I can say only that I have made arrangements for Irving's first appearance at my theatre. Oh! You mean the fostival! The only festival! I am concerned in is the ministrel show, and that is going to be a magnificent affair. As to operatic or dramatic festivals, I know nothing whatever."

NOTES FROM LONDON.

POLITICAL, PERSONAL, MISCELLANEOUS.

[FROM THE REGULAR CORRESPONDENT OF THE TERBUNE.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.

I found on returning to London the other day that a report was making its way in certain circles that the movement for an Orleanist restoration in France was likely soon to become serious. The story is not, on the face of it, very credible, but you may like to read what an extremely well-informed correspondent in Paris, whose note reaches me to-day, has to say on the

"I take this oportunity of remarking that I think the London clubs are wrong in their estimate of the Comte de Paris's chances of restoring the monarchy. He is neither good enough, in the sense of mental power and goodness, nor scoundrel enough to ascend so high as his ambition prompts him to mount. For what he has, he should, if he had self-knowledge, pray the Lord to make him truly thankful and satisfied."

The bestowal of a Garter is not, perhaps, a matter of supreme importance to the world in general. It is of some importance to him who gets it, and to the disappointed candidates who had hoped to get t, and did not. But the one just given to the Duke of Argyl is said to have a history not without its political significance. Rumors have for some time been current that the Duke of Argyll would reenter the Cabinet, or would in some way resume his connection with the Government which he quitted in 1881 on account of the Irish Land Bill. There has been talk of overtures from Mr. Gladstone. Others say the overtures came from the Duke. It no longer matters much who made them. The gift of the vacant Garter is understood to signify that the Duke of Argyll will not again join Mr. Gladstone's Ministry. It is offered and accepted in full satisfaction of all the Duke's claims, if claims he have, and grievances, if grievances may be supposed to exist. His neutrality is henceforward to be a benevolent neutrality. So has it, for that matter, on more than one occasion since his retirement from office. I do not myself believe the Duke of Argyll to be the kind of man whose views of public questions would be controlled by selfish considerations. His views, whether right or wrong, are at least sincere. Class prejudices may affect him. His notions of what is due to a landlord may be colored by the fact that he is himself a landlord, and one on whom the hardships of land-owning at one time bore heavily. He passes in Scotland for being extremely stiff in his dealings with his ten-But with all that, he is high-minded, honorable, above the suspicion of traffic in offices or dignities. He accepts the Garter, I don't doubt, as a tribute due to his rank' and personal distinction. reposes in the College of Surgeons, side by side with So it is. Another story makes the Queen the immediate author of this gift. The Queen is sure to have had something to say in the matter, but Mr. Gladstone is not the man to abandon the prerogatives of his position as Prime Minister. There has been thought to be an incompatibility between the Garter and the Thistle, and one man seldom wears both. He is expected to resign the Thistle when the Garter is given him. But in the Duke of Ar-The most striking feature of the November num ber of Macmillan's The English Illustrated Magazine (a cumbrons title) is a series of illustrations by Mr. R. W. Macbeth, A. R. A., of the Fens. These are engraved on wood in close imitation of what I suppose may here be called the American manner. The effects of light and shade are caught sharply enough, but the English work leaves much to be desired in delicacy and decision of cutting. Mr. Macbeth, I should say, has felt the fen country. He has not tried to reproduce the flat loneliness of it, but to suggest it. Mr. J. H. Shorthouse, whom it seems still necessary to describe to the public as the author of "John Inglesant," contributes to this number a "spiritual romance," en-titled "The Little Schoolmaster Mark," Professor Huxley concludes his paper on oysters and the oyster question, winding up with a characteristically confident expression of his belief that a means of breeding oysters will be discovered. "I have no doubt," says he, "that when those who undertake the business are provided with a proper knowledge of the conditions under which they have to work," then the thing will be done. The words were hardly in type whon an English paper published an account of the process recently discovered in America. Mr. Bernard H. Becker writes on brass work at Birmingham, an article which, notwithstanding its title, has nothing to do with the "Celebrities Home" which he supplies weekly to a society journal, for which Mr. Becker fills the office of professional interviewer-fills it, I must say, with tact and marked ability, and singularly few faults of taste. The circulation of this new venture is, I hear very large, the first number having to be reprinted more than once. Mr. Comeyus Carr does his editing with discretion, knowledge and enterprise. He would oblige his readers if he could induce Mesers. MacMillan not to inter the table of contents among a rank overgrowth of advertisements.

The American illustrated magazines, still I apprehend, hold their own, albeit the price of them remains in one case double, and in the other (which is a mistake) four pence more than double that of this new English rival. They are everywhere to be met with, or, if they are not, are in demand. The other day in Scotland, I was taken over a Workingman's Institute by the beneficent founder of it. There was a pretty good supply of books and papers, but room for more. It appeared, on inquiry, that nothing was more desired than Harper's and The Ceatury; the former of which had made its way even into this remote hamlet of North Britain.

I received last night a letter bearing the postmark San Francisco, October 10, 1 p. m., -fifteen days from the Pacific coast to the banks of the Thames, This, I suppose, is better time than is commonly made. The letter left New-York last Wednesday, October 17, and it certainly is not common for Wednesday's New-York mails to be delivered in London on Thursday evening of the week follow-ing, as this was. The North German Lloyd steamship Werra brought it, and the mails by the Arizona, of the Guion Line, which left the day before, were received that same Thursday morning. A consort of the Arizona-the Alaska-performed a week or two before the all but unprecedented feat of delivering her mails in London on the morning of the eighth day from her departure from New-York. It was announced some time since that the Brit-sh Post Office had at last resolved to break with its time-honored (or dishonored) custom of sending the American mails by slow ships. Upon the expiration of present contracts the American system is to be adopted, and the fastest ships will be selected to carry letters. This long-needed change is due, I presume, to Mr. Fawcett. Against it the permanent officials stood out to the last, or almost to the last. This very session they put into Mr. Fawcett's mouth the stereotyped answer to the oftrepeated demand for improvement, answers to the effect that regularity was the essential thing, and not occasional speed. So far good. Now when will Mr. Fawcett see his way to expediting the inward American mails? When will be ordain that the service from Queenstown to London shall be so arranged that five minutes' delay in the arrival of a ship all the way across the Atlantic from New-York shall not occasion a delay of forty-eight hours in Americans who have seen Mr. Alma-Tadema's beautiful house, or who have read any of the many descriptions of it, will be sorry to hear that it is doomed. For a long time past this brilliant artist has been trying to buy ground enough to enable him to build a new studio adjacent to the one he now occupies. These efforts have failed, and since he has decided in his own mind that the present studio is too small, there is nothing for it but to go elsewhere, and this he has now resolved to do. He will take with him so much of the ornamental and decorative work in the existing house as does not make part of its fabrie, and all this will be seen again in the new mansion. But there are many things that can never be transferred elsewhere, and years so many nice people have been in the habit of meeting, may continue under another roof, but a certain perfume of that delightful hospitality will linger in Townsend House long after its present owners have departed from it. There, too, are the walls which M. Tadema has twice adorned, either with his own hands or from his own designs. When the first had been destroyed by the great Regent's Park Explosion, the sum paid him by the canal company which was responsible for the damage ounted, if I recollect rightly, to $35,000. There is not a room, not a corner, not a panel, which does not at this moment bear in one way or another the impress of M. Tadema's astonishing genius for purely decorative art-a genius distinct from the other and higher genius which has to do with a higher art. It will not all go at once-many months must elapse before the new residence can be ready, but the fate of this admirable home of one of the most admirable artists of this generation is none the less irrevocably

The readers of Punch the world over have lost a friend. Who does not remember that huge dog which Mr. Du Maurier was so fond of drawing, and who has served so often as guardian to his pretty little girls? He was a real dog, a St. Bernard of pure breed, and his name was Chang. He was as well known in Hampstead, in Whitby, and elsewhere, as his master, and has been for many years an object of idolatry, or at least of great admiration, to a great many people. No rules against dogs held good against this giant. He travelled by rail with the rest of the family. He walked tranquilly through gates on which was inscribed in letters of gold: "No dogs allowed." Nobody dreamed interfering with him. It was not terror be inspired but respect and liking. His temper was perfect, his devotion to his master perhaps equal to his master's devotion to him. In his younger days Chang had immense spirits, and his vast strength and courage made him at times formidable, and at all times he occupied a good deal of M. Du Maurier's attention and time. Seldom was one seen without the other; but if the master took the liberty of leaving home unaccompanied by Chang, the faithful dog had to be tied up to prevent his going in search of his companion. He was, however, so far devoted to one of the daughters as to be content if she remained with him. There is nothing very remarkable perhaps in all this. What was remarkable in Chang was, beyond his great stature and strength, the dignity and fine lines of his head and of his whole figure. There are plenty of big St. Bernards. There was only one Chang, He surpassed all his kind in majesty of demeanor, and he will be remembered, I suppose, as long as any dog that can be named. Not only because in life he was so well known, but because his skeleton now that of Landscer's famous bloodhound,

EVACUATION DAY PREPARATIONS.

THE WASHINGTON STATUE UNVEILING-GENERAL DALLY AND HIS TELLOWS,

At the meeting of the committee having in charge the Evacuation Day celebration, which was held last night at the Victoria Hotel. it was decided to recommend that money be appropriated to bire a band from Philadelphia for the parade of the Fire Department from the $20,000 given by the City for the celebration. It was announced that new subscriptions, varying in amount from $25 to $500, had been received, making the total amount subscribed $3,100. The request of the Fire In urance Patrol to be allowed to join the parade with four wagons and a fire engine, sixty men being in the wagons and on the engine, was granted. In the parade of steamers on the river it is expected that 400 steam ves els will take part, making the line twenty miles long. It is intended to have a line of war-vessels anchored in the North River from Twenty-third-st. to the Battery.

THE TEEATMENT OF TYPHOID FEVER.

A DISCUSSION AT THE ACADEMY OF MEDICINE-PAYING TERRUTE TO DR. SIMS.

The Academy of Medicine held its regular meeting last night at the hall of the Academy, No. 12 West Thirty-first-st. Every seat was occupied and many ladies were present. Dr. Fordyce Barker, who presided, spoke in eulogistic terms of the late Dr. Marion Sims, "by whose denth," he said, "the Academy of Medicine and the profession of the country has lost its most original and most brilliant genius in the department of surgical genecology." He appointed Dr. T. A. Emmet to prepare | tute for Preserving and Perfecting Anglo-Saxon Weights a memoir of him to be read at the first meeting of the Academy in January.

Dr. Francis Delatield then read a paper on "Typhoid

DR. STOCKER HOOTED BY SOCIALISTS.
LONDON, Nov. 15.—Dr. Stocker was amnouned to speak at Memorial Hall to-night on "Christian Socialism." Although the admission was by ticket a large number of Socialists took possession of the hall and created great disorder. They hooted Dr. Stocker and unfurled red flags. The "Marseillaise" was song and the platform was carried with cheers for the "next revolution." Dr. Stocker was flusily obliged to retire, and the meeting afterward dispersed.

A NATIONALIST MEETING STOPPED.

DUBLIN, Nov. 15.—The Orangsemen, in obedience to the proclamation of the Government, abstained from assembling at Garrison to-day, but the Nationalists assembled to the number of 4,000. The meeting was interfered with, however, by the magistrate, who, at the head of a force of cavalry, infantry and police, road the Government's proclamation forbuilding the meeting was interfered with, however, by the magistrate, who, at the head of a force of cavalry, infantry and police, road the Government's proclamation forbuilding the meeting with the crowd thereupon dispersed.

In regard to treatment the question of the advantages of alcohol is a difficult one to decide. In some cases restlements is diminished by its use; but, in a number of apparently equally favorable cases if it is used we see the reverse of this picture. My rule is to withhold alcohol until the third week, and then to give it only if it seems necessary. In two cases which I have recently noticed, where large doses of alcohol were given the delirium was strongly marked; on the sudden withdrawal of the alcohol the delirium cased, and in all other respects the patient showed marked improvement. The best treatment is slungly pleuty of rest in bed, quictude and a strictly regular diet, reserving medicinal diet only for special symptoms.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Veterans' Rights Union was held last evening at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. There were present General N. W. Day, chalrman; Major E. W. Brueninghausen, Major John C. Walker, J. W. Kay, William H. Wharton and G Roberts. The organization was formed about a year its object being to use influence to prevent any dis crimination against the employment of ex-soldiers and allors by United States postmasters, port collectors a other National officials, in violation of sections 1,754 and 1,755 of the Revised Statutes, and to prevent their removal from office without good cause. The members of the committee are not office-holders, and are pledged not to accept office. The evening was spent in prepari reports to be made at the convention of the Union to held at Schilling's Hall, No. 364 Sixthave., November: when each Grand Army Post will be represented by o

LATE ADVICES FROM HAYTI.

Stephen Preston, the Haytian Minister, in this eity, received a cable dispatch from Janualca yesterday stat-ing that the Government had fully paid off the debt outstanding on the new man-of-war and that the vessel was now flying the Haytian flag. The report of a rebel victory was also contradicted, and it was positively stated that the Government forces are now in a position to route the enemy successfully. It is the general opinion that President Salomon will not be over-thrown, as he is becoming more popular every day. Mr. Preston is of the opinion that the revolution is almost quelled. Another fortuight, he believes, will see the reseation of hostilities and then, Hoyer Bazela is, the quiet in that city as well as in Jacmel, Cape Haytien, Gonaives. Petit Tron, Grand Trou, Jeremie and Miragoane. The rebeis are much depressed over their severe defeats and serious losses and are more than anxious to see the end of the insurrection.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JOHN W. GARRETT. [BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.]

BALTIMORE, Nov. 15 .- Mrs. John W. Garrett, wife of the president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, who was so seriously intured by being thrown from her carriage on the Hillen-road, died at her country home, Montebello, Baltimore County, at 8:10 o'clock this morning.

In falling from the carriage she struck her head upon the road with great force, causing concussion of the brain, from which she became unconscious, and she so remained for the greater part of the intervening time. However, she occasionally rallied, and during these periods refreshments and restoratives were applied. At an early hour this morning it became evident that she was slowly dying, and surrounded by her husband, sons and immediate relatives she passed away at the hour stated. This was the third driving accident that happened to her within a year. Nine months ago, while she was being driven in year. Nine months ago, while she was being driven in her carriage with the same horses along Easton-ave, the animals became frightened at a railway car. Again, several months ago, the horses ran away with her carriage in the city, and were stopped by the driver in time to prevent collision with the vehicles in a crowded thoroughfare. Just after this Mrs. Garrett accompanied her husband on his European tour. Soon after her return she met with another accident, this time resulting in death. Mrs. Garrett was the daughter of Thomas Harrison, who was in former years a prominent dry-goods merchant of this city. She leaves two sons, Robert Garrett and Thomas Harrison Garrett, who now, with the father, constitute the firm of Robert Garrett & Sons. She was in her sixty-first year, and had been married forty-seven years.

CHARLES OWEN BOLLES

Major Charles Owen Bolles died at his house, No. 11 Park-st., Newark, yesterday morning, age seventysix. He was born in New-London, Conn., and his parents removed to Newark in his infancy. Mr. Bolles was educated in England and France and spent about thirty cated in England and France and spect about thirty years in foreign travel. He possessed an estate in Cuba, and was for some time in the fur business in this city. He served in the New-Jersey Legislature, and as Major of a Newark military company he received and entertained Andrew Jackson upon his visit to Newark.

WESTERN PASSENGER RATES,

CHICAGO, Nov. 15.-The passenger agents of the Chicago and Kansas City Railroads met here to-day for the purpose of considering the troubles in regard to passenger rates. The Rock Island road complained that kets of the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluffs and New-Orleans and Denver roads had been brought and New-Orients and Peaver Tostos had been known into Kansas City and sold at cut rates, whereupon the Rock Island made the cut to $10. It was agreed to dis-cipline the effending roads unless the sale of cut rate tickets was stopped. The meeting also agreed to restore and maintain the rates between Chicago and Kansas City.

ANGLO-SAXON WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

In order to form a society to uphold the Anglo-Saxon system of weights and measures, a number of men met yesterday at No. 127 East Twenty-third-st. The society will be a branch of the International Instiand Measures, in Boston. Charles Latimer, of Cleveland, Ohio, where there is a kindred society, of which he is president, addressed the meeting, showing, according to his statement, that the Anglo-Saxons had one half the wealth, and carried on two-thirds of the commerce of the world. He argued that there was no need for adopting the strange and perplexing metric system instead of the familiar Anglo-Saxon, which, he predicted, would be acceptable the system of the commercial would.

ROBBED BY DAYLIGHT IN FIFTH-AVE.

As Mrs. Bessie K. Francis, of No. 41 West Twenty-second-st., was passing Twenty-second-st. and Flfth-ave, at half-past 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a rough-looking man sprang in front of her and pointing a knife at her breast demanded her money. She gave him her purse, which contained 90 cents and her handkerchtet. The man then darted off, but he was pursued by officer Sorman Westerveit, of the Twenty-muth Precluct, and arrested. He was recognized as Charles Henderson, alias William O. Lambert, an old offender.

A CONNECTICUT " VERDANT."

From The Harrford Times.

A man of rather verdant mien entered Duffy's shoe store, on Main-st, this morning, and wanted to know if he could have a boot patened while he was waiting for it. He was sent below to see the cobbler, and stood by while the work was being done. The patch was put on with both neatness and dispatch, by the comparatively new process of sticking ft, without a stitch taken. Mr. Verdant had never heard of or seen the invention and supposed that the only proper way to do the job was by the stitching process, and when the shee doctor handed his boot back without stitching, he took it, carefully looked it over, and then handed it back, saying, "It's all right, see it on just where it is."

Now it was time for the cobbler to look up. "What," he said.
"Sew it on. It's all right," was the answer.

he said.
"Sew it on. It's all right," was the answer.
"It's done," remarked the shoemaker.
"It's done," the other ejaculated.
"Yes, it was done by guin," was the answer.
"You can't come the guin game over me," Verdant answered. "I want that patch sewed on."
"That's the way we do it nowdays. It is better than sittening." stifening."

PHILADELPHIA CULTURE.

"Mother, who is this Martin Luther that the papers are talking so much about!" asked a fashionable New-York young lady.
"Martin Luther-Luther," mused the mother, "the name sounds familiar enough. What has he been doing!" "I can't exactly make out, but it must have been something very nice. They are celebrating his birthday."
"Is he a foreigner!" asked the mother.
"He must be, or the people in this country wouldn't make such a fuss over him."
"Luther-Luther," continued the mother; "I met a Mr. Luther in Paris last year—that delightful gentlemen, you remember, who took us to dive, and who afterward borrowed $100 of your father and forgot to return it, but I don't think his first name was Martin. This gentleman is probably some celebrated Englishman, who is coming to this country to lecture. You must speak to your father about tickets for the opening night."

There are seventy-eight trains from Boston to New-York each week, and they carry more than fifteen thousand purchasers from New-England. An advertisement in The Boston Journal, which goes into more than fifty thousand familiae east of the Hudson, is a remunerative investment for a New-York firm.

The sudden death of Dr. J. Marion Sims, on the 13th first, is recognized as a greyious loss by all who are interested in the cause of humanity and especially by those associated with him in this charity. From the day of its organization until his departure for Europe in 1861 he was its only surgeon, and practically developed there the improved methods of operating which he had originated, notably the use of the sliver suitore, now found to be indispensable. During thirty years of his active life he devoted his tasful basis, and carried the graitfulde of a return from that visit to Europe he was elected a member of this Board, and served with his wonted interest. When the Board of Surgeons was reorganized to consist of four members he accepted one of the newly created positions and resign that position he became one of the Committee of this Board.
